

Florida District 21

KEEPING HOSPITALS OPEN FOR
HARDWORKING COMMUNITIES

With budget discussions well underway, lawmakers must identify ways to reduce the federal healthcare spend. Some proposals include eliminating or reducing provider taxes that fund Medicaid. These proposals are ill advised. Provider taxes are essential financing tool, especially for fiscally conservative states. Provider taxes allow states to use revenue from hospital taxes, instead of citizen taxes, to support the state share. Without this tool, District 21 would suffer.

District 21 is home to hardworking families and small business owners who depend on local hospitals for essential care. From rural communities to growing cities, access to quality, affordable healthcare is vital to keeping the district strong. However, many hospitals face financial challenges, putting critical services at risk.

192,000
RESIDENTS ARE UNINSURED OR DEPENDENT ON MEDICAID

12,900
PREGNANT WOMEN DEPEND ON
MEDICAID FOR MATERNAL CARE EACH YEAR

In Florida District 21, there are 13 hospitals serving over 820,000 citizens.
Of those, 6 operate at a financial loss.

SAVING HOSPITALS BY DRAWING FEDERAL FUNDING VIA LOCAL PROVIDER TAXES

Local provider taxes play a critical role in sustaining hospitals across District 21 by allowing them to access federal matching funds – without requiring citizens to pay more. Unlike other funding mechanisms, provider taxes do not impose any financial burden on local constituents or businesses, or the state. Instead, a local government collects a tax, assessment, or fee – defined as a “provider tax” in the Social Security Act – exclusively from hospitals in its jurisdiction. As long as these provider taxes comply with governing laws and regulations, they qualify as the nonfederal share needed to draw federal Medicaid dollars into Florida.

WITHOUT PROVIDER TAXES, CITIZENS PAY THE PRICE

Provider taxes provide essential funding for District 21 hospitals, ensuring access to care for uninsured and Medicaid-dependent patients. Without provider taxes, District 21 hospitals would face significant revenue shortfalls, forcing local governments to either cut hospital funding—risking closures and reduced services—or raise property taxes, shifting the financial burden onto local residents.

Providers	County	Taxpayer Funds Needed to Replace Provider Tax Funding
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Cleveland Clinic Health System Encompass Health HCA Florida Lawnwood Hospital HCA Florida St. Lucie Hospital Jupiter Medical Center Kindred Hospital Port St. Lucie Hospital PAM Health Rehab Hospital Palm Beach Gardens Medical Center Coral Shores Behavioral Health 	Martin	$13.1M
	Palm Beach	$77.0M
	St. Lucie	$16.3M

Without proper funding, District 21 faces two harsh realities: hospital closures creating healthcare deserts or higher property taxes to keep hospitals open.

Protect Provider Taxes. Protect Healthcare. Protect Communities.